

The Makers of Sense are Brother El and Cristián Huepe. Together, they fuse energies to create radical bodies of music that combine unusually warm electronica, hip hop, house, trance, dub, live instrumentation and urban elements with new styles yet to be coined. Their union of vibes is best described by Heisenberg's Uncertainty Principle which states that the more precisely a position is determined, the less precisely its associated momentum can be known and vice versa. This quantum principle defines an alternative reality, which cannot be restricted by the boundaries of our every-day world. Similarly, the music of the Makers of Sense defines its own alternative reality beyond restrictions of usual positions and momentums of our measurable world. Through the auditory experience, this new environment forces traditional sensibilities to be rearranged inside the listeners mind. The music of the Makers of Sense then becomes a guide for building and exploring new realms outside the everyday world and provides unbounded possibilities.

The future of music is hear right before your eyes and into your ears...
